Each fall football talk in virtually every Iowa community is of high school football. Friday Night is traditionally reserved for the "Legends of the Fall" and with nearly 23,000 participants in grades 9-12, the sport is the highest participation activity in Iowa high schools.

You can call it "Pride in Pads," "Courage in Cleats," or "Glory on the Gridiron," but it does not change the fact that football season is embraced by students and adults alike. It is a phenomenon in towns and cities across our Iowa landscape. The names of top players and teams may change each year, but the tradition never does.

Iowa high schools began playing the sport in the mid-to late 1800s, with difficulty placing an exact starting date. With no lighted fields, games were played in the afternoon. Transportation was limited, and often the teams playing the game were located along railroads. The early fields ranged from stock yards, fairgrounds, to pastures and eventually to high school fields. The season would usually start with games in mid-September and end with a game on or near Armistice Day and in a few instances Thanksgiving. The early rules had little uniformity until the turn of the century, and the equipment was only minimal compared to the safety standards that followed. It was not uncommon for the early teams to be a collection of high school and non-high school players.

It was a rugged game that often bordered on brutality. In 1905 the college game reported 18 deaths and 180 serious injuries. Thus, when the newly organized IHSAA was formed in 1904, its members immediately voted for a ban on playing the game. Some non-member schools continued to play as the fledgling organization sought to gain control and leadership over educational athletics. Nationally, President Theodore Roosevelt called college leaders together to try and preserve the game by making changes in the rules to make it safer. Before reinstating the sport in 1908, the membership of the IHSAA drafted age and grade eligibility rules and required a physical prior to participation. For over a century Iowa students now have been playing the game that faced extinction. The IHSAA and its coaches have led the nation in many rules changes emphasizing safety. The IHSAA secured permission from the National Federation of State High School Athletic Associations (NFHS) to implement these changes and reported on their success. Many of the changes were codified in the national rule book later. Several of them follow below:

In 1960 Iowa was the first state to mandate mouth pieces; in 1968 it was the first state to eliminate spearing and prevent the use of head in tackling and blocking; and in the late 1980s and early 90s Iowa was the first to experiment with bringing coaches onto the field during time outs to check their players for heat stress and exhaustion. By 2004, Iowa was the only state to provide coaches with instruments and charts for measuring levels of heat and humidity, thus trying to eliminate injuries related to heat and cardiac stress. The IHSAA has enjoined the Iowa Football Coaches Association, which was organized in 1963, in emphasizing safety issues and promoting the sport.

As football became more popular each year, rules continued to emphasize making the game safer. Equipment likewise has improved. In a game that emphasizes sportsmanship, safety has always remained a primary focus of the IHSAA and Iowa has led the way in making the game safer. Besides equipment, changes that improved game included playing facilities that were well-lighted with natural turf nurtured by watering systems, as well as some artificial surfaces.

In a related change, the 1930s and 1940s saw over 140 schools with a six or eight man team in addition to a over 270 with 11-player teams. Yet even when you add these numbers, less than half of the membership of the IHSAA prior to 1960 offered the sport.

But football enjoyed a resurgence of popularity, thanks in good measure to the creation of a playoff structure that breathed new life into it. After several discussions with the football coaches association, the Association's Board of Control implemented one of the more popular innovations connected with the sport — the playoff structure in 1972. Prior to 1972, teams would have an 8 or 9 game schedule and the season would end. It was the only Iowa high school sport that did not have a state tournament to determine a champion and the IHSAA and the coaches felt there should be a better way to end the season. The member schools supported the idea and a new age of football was born for Iowa kids. By 1979, the number of schools offering football reached high tide with 435 teams from the 506 member high schools. Today there are 341 teams involving 372 of the 395 member schools. Until 1972, the State Champion was "mythical" — the school that finished first in the ratings poll. The playoffs in each of the five 11-player and the one 8-player class, crown champions that are made on the field. Each year, a special story about a school, a player, group of players, or a coach captures the interest of fans.

In 1993 after athletic conferences started losing members due to school closings, consolidations and shrinking enrollments, teams had difficulty in securing complete schedules. The solution was district football and kept competition among schools with like enrollment with re-districting done ever two years. In 1998, the 8-player game was re-introduced with Elk Horn-Kimballton, Whiting, Sentral, Fenton; Charter Oak-Ute, Exira and Walnut leading the way. By 2000 there were 26 schools playing and the playoff format included 8-player teams.

Iowa players have an extraordinary record of achievement beyond high school, and boast a legacy of which fans can revel. From all-time high school and University of Iowa greats, Aubrey Devine of Des Moines, Gordon Locke of Denison, one of Notre Dame's fable Four Horsemen Elmer Layden from Davenport to modern day greats the legacy continues. The first Heisman Trophy winner was Jay Berwanger of Dubuque, and Adel's Nile Kinnick, one of the most prolific athletes the state has produced, won the Heisman in 1939. Other native Iowans who prepped on the gridirons of our state have finished high in the Heisman voting including "Sonny" Franck of Davenport, Bob O'Dell of Sioux City and Randy Duncan, Des Moines Roosevelt each finished among the top three. Numerous other Iowans have won national collegiate awards for their position play such as Chad Hennings, the first ever Outland Trophy winner, and Robert Gallery the 2003 Outland Trophy winner; Trev Alberts, the 1993 Butkus Award winner, and Nate Kaeding, the 2002 Groza Award winner. Several Iowans have gone on to star in the NFL and other professional leagues. Near the top of the list is former Super Bowl MVP, Kurt Warner, a former prep at Cedar Rapids Regis. Former Iowa preps have finished high or won individual honors in Division II (Chris Hegg of Hudson at Truman State 1985, and Adam Timmerman of Cherokee, D-II offensive lineman of the year in 1994 when he played for South Dakota State.) In Division III, Marion's Carey Bender while playing for Coe won the 1994 Gagliardi Trophy, that division's equivalent of the Heisman.

A total of 151 former players have been inducted into the IHSAA's Players Hall of Fame through 2012. Twenty-one former Iowa preps have gone on to earn First Team Consensus All-American recognition at NCAA Division I schools and 83 have become first team All-Americans in Divisions I-AA, II and III, with several others winning NAIA honors. Twenty-three former Iowa prep players ended the 2012 season on the roster of National Football League teams. But, the huge base of hometown heroes, forever nameless to many, continues to be your typical high school youngster who remains the heart and soul of high school football. Also, key to the sport's success are the coaches and administrators who have endeavored to deliver a great educational experience to their student-athletes. Since 1969, the football coaches' association has inducted 207 coaching greats. Ten coaches have 300 or more victories, 38 others have 200 or more career wins while another 60 have 150 or more career triumphs.

While the individual player and coach achievements are many and signify a strong measure of school and community support, the underpinning of success, is a large core of players who participate and dedicate themselves to representing their school. They and the fans make "Football Friday" a true community celebration. It is an experience that attracts slightly more than one out of every four high school boys in the state and reminds those who have gone before of the thrills and values they enjoyed. The act of an athlete playing football for his/her local school is a bond with nearly the three-quarters of a million who have preceded them.
